16. Are there advantages to working with the students at a project center rather than in the traditional classroom setting?

A:

Are there advantages to working with the students at a project center rather than in the traditional classroom setting?

Paul Mathisen:

Students at a project center gain practical real-world experience not captured in a classroom setting. Projects provide opportunities to work as a team, coordinate with a sponsor or client, and address a meaningful problem important to society. Faculty advisors get to know the students much better at a project center than in a classroom. The group environment is more conducive to promoting learning and positive participation.

A:

At what point do the students start to interact with their sponsor?

Prior to going to Bar Harbor, the students are in contact with the people that they're going to be working with—in Bar Harbor it's primarily the Acadia National Park and rangers and specialists in various areas. There's a lot of back and forth in written communication and via skype phone calls, so by the time the students arrive, they feel that they already know the sponsor. In most cases, that correspondence is really inspiring and uplifting and the students feel well prepared.

61. Can I remain anonymous when submitting a concern?

A:

Can I remain anonymous when submitting a concern?

While full anonymity is not guaranteed, reporters are able to exclude identifying information from the "I'm Concerned About a Student" form. Generally, we encourage transparency. It is our experience that when a student's peers, family or professors share their concerns, it often creates greater opportunities for help seeking. Additionally, we recommend providing identifying information so the CARE Team can reach out for added or clarifying information about the situation, as needed. Overall, the CARE Team will keep the reporter's information private as much as possible and focus the conversation on supporting the student.

A:

Can WPI write a letter of support for my family member's visa application to attend my commencement?

WPI does not issue individual letters of invitation, as the U.S. Department of State has stated that "Visa applicants must qualify on the basis of the applicant's residence and ties abroad, rather than assurances from U.S. family and friends. If you choose to bring a letter of invitation or Affidavit of Support to your interview, please remember it is not one of the factors used in determining whether to issue or deny the visa". Guidance on assisting your family member's application for a U.S. tourist visa can be found on the website of

U.S. Department of State

Do the students work directly with the sponsor or through the Bar Harbor faculty?

The Bar Harbor students work directly with the sponsors. In most cases, as the advisor I'm in the loop, but the students get to a point where they understand the project enough and the issues they're dealing with that they obtain a certain confidence level where they are able to navigate their own communication. Ultimately, they work more as consultants and professional advisors to the park and not as students.

Do the students work directly with the sponsor or through the Boston faculty?

Seth Tuler:

They work more directly with the sponsor and I encourage the sponsors to work directly with the students. The sponsors know the issues so the more guidance and feedback they can give the students, the more successful the project will be. I play more of an intermediary role in helping ask questions I feel the students or sponsors aren't asking. In essence, I try to stimulate and broaden the conversations between the students and the sponsors so as to add value to the discussions.

87. Do you personally think that students continue to reflect on their IQP experience down the road?

A:

Do you personally think that students continue to reflect on their IQP experience down the road?

The project experience manifests itself in many different ways with students. In particular, it's the first time in their academic experience that they're working exclusively on a project in a group atmosphere over an extended period of time. That has a transforming effect on students. When you put two people together, three people together, four people together, you have a much larger domain and experience to draw upon. When that happens, a certain chemistry begins with the students and that transformation is what effects students the most. They go on in their careers and in their lives and they use that information, they use that experience, and occasionally they reflect to where it all began and how important it was.

A:

Does College Credit Jumpstart for High Schoolers help my chances of getting admitted to WPI?

As part of an undergraduate application, WPI does look at demonstrated interest. This means that an interaction with WPI would be noted, which could range from visiting with WPI as a college fair to attending an on campus event. Participating in College Credit Jumpstart for High Schoolers would be another form of demonstrated interest. Please note that by participating in any particular event or opportunity, that does not guarantee admission into WPI.

A:

How can I help my student connect socially on campus?

It can definitely be nerve-wracking to meet new people, but we know that the more connected a student is on campus, the better their grades, and the healthier they are. Here are just a few of the ways your student can find out what's happening on campus:

Social Media:

The Student Activities Office is on Instagram

TikTok

, and Facebook

—encourage your student to follow their accounts (as well as those of their favorite organizations) for the latest campus happenings.

Campus-wide Bulletin Boards and Display Screens:

All bulletin boards and screens across campus are regularly updated with upcoming events and activities.

Regular Ongoing Events:

Several programs and activities are held on a regular basis and are open to all, including:

Friday Night Gaming with the Science Fiction Society

Central Rock Gym trips every Friday with the Outing Club

Saturday night video game tournaments hosted by the Video Game Club from 7pm-midnight

Pickleball pickup games on Wednesdays and Sundays

LEGO Club build sessions on Sundays from 1-2pm

A weekly art time led by the Art and Design Club

Cheese Club meets every other Friday at 5pm

SocComm hosts various events and movie nights on Saturdays and Sundays

If your student needs help getting connected, encourage them to reach out to the Student Activities Office (SAO) on the third floor of the Campus Center or through email at sao@wpi.edu

; the team would love to help them find clubs and organizations that meet their needs and interests.

ProjectConnect

and

groups that vary from term to term from the Student Development & Counseling Center are other great connection points; students may reach out to the SDCC at

123. How did you see the students change over the entirety of the project?

A:

How did you see the students change over the entirety of the project?

I have seen a significant change in almost every student as they transition from the beginning of the project to its completion. The amount of learning, contribution, and teamwork is enormous. Many of the students do not have any industry experience when taking the GQP capstone. This course helps all the students in a unique way to get industry experience while at school, and it is an exceptional opportunity provided to our students to work on real data sets and solve real problems in a real company. By the end of the semester, students think like experts in their GQP fields and the GQP experience helps them practice their professional presentation skills, publication skills, and how to perform professionally in a real work situation. I believe our GQP curriculum is not only essential to the students' individual learning but allows them to hone their skills in applying their learning to real-world situations through collaboration, preparing them to undertake similar projects in their future careers.

124. How different is working with students at a project center vs. in the traditional classroom setting?

A:

How different is working with students at a project center vs. in the traditional classroom setting?

Frederick Bianchi:

Because the off-campus project is self-driven, the students have to be motivated; they have to make many decisions on their own while working in a team. They also need to be able to plan ahead and have a vision and strategy for the goals of the project. I see a completely different transformation happening at a project center vs. in a classroom. The students at a project center are being impacted not only by the project work, but by the immersive and cultural environment.

126. How do graduate qualifying projects and capstone projects work at WPI?

A:

How do graduate qualifying projects and capstone projects work at WPI?

One of the central priorities in WPI's educational philosophy is the application of academic skills and knowledge to real-world problems. The capstone project represents a substantive evaluation and application of coursework covered in the program. Students are encouraged to select projects with practical significance for the advancement of their company's competitive position as well as their own personal development. The project is administered, advised, and evaluated by WPI as part of the learning experience, but students are encouraged to seek mentorship from experienced colleagues in the profession. The presence of or degree of participation from a mentor is made at the discretion of the student or the organization sponsoring the program.

158. How do I support my student's transition to college?

A:

How do I support my student's transition to college?

The transition from high school to college can be difficult for students and families alike, but you can support your student by providing an empathetic listening ear, following their lead in engaging on campus, and allowing them to make calculated mistakes. Personal identity and growth are fluid processes and not all students take the same path. Encourage your student to go to class, do the work, and ask for help. Some students may struggle while transitioning to WPI because of its academic rigor, being surrounded by many likeminded peers, and pressure they may feel for a smooth transition. As a parent or caregiver, first ask your student if they want your help or suggestions.

If not, take a step back and be ready to provide support when asked, but step in if you're seriously worried for their safety or welfare.

If yes, focus on practical skills to suggest to your student (how to use a calendar, scheduling their day-to-day, and creating effective study habits, work/life balance, and self-advocacy). Support them in connecting with those on campus who can help model and encourage these behaviors.

162. How do students benefit from Army ROTC?

A:

How do students benefit from Army ROTC?

In college and after graduation, cadets find that the training and experience that they have received are assets - whether pursuing an

Army or civilian career

. Employers place high regard on the management and leadership skills that Cadets acquire throughout the ROTC curriculum. Plus, ROTC looks great on a resume. When Cadets complete the ROTC course, upon graduation, they become commissioned officers in the U.S. Army. Young Army Officers are typically responsible for hundreds of Soldiers and millions of dollars in equipment. This type of responsibility and leadership experience is uncommon for young professionals in the private sector.

Additionally, Army ROTC provides excellent growth opportunities in terms of leadership, interpersonal relationships, team building, and education through external internships and military service schools.

Cadets have completed internships across the country, including Los Alamos National Labs and with the National Security Agency in Washington, DC. Every year several Cadets attend the Army's Airborne and Air Assault Schools.

How do you assist in helping students overcome challenges they face at the project center?

To overcome the challenges, we have the students reflect on the experience itself. In my particular case, I like to plan a cultural learning evening halfway through the term when they share their experiences with others. This helps them express what they are actually going through.

How do you define success for the students at the completion of an IQP in Albania?

This is based on their feedback that this has been a life-changing experience for the better. Their perspective on working in society is different than when they first chose to do the project.

166. How do you define success for the students at the completion of an IQP in Bar Harbor?

A:

How do you define success for the students at the completion of an IQP in Bar Harbor?

It's defined in many different ways. Certainly there's a way to quantify what the student have done while off campus—how they've interacted as a group, the many benchmarks they've had to achieve, etc. But there's a component that's more difficult to value—how much a student has grown personally. A lot of academic programs shy away from that kind of evaluation but that's the kind I look for because I see it as being equally as important to the project experience itself. It's about where they've started and where they end. That's the growth I like to see.

How do you define success for the students at the completion of an IQP in Boston?

Seth Tuler:

I measure success if they're able to articulate the complexity of problems and solutions for the sponsor beyond superficial or simple answers—and if they're able to construct an argument and bring to bear other kinds of data that support their recommendations.

168. How do you interact with the students while at the Albania project center?

A:

How do you interact with the students while at the Albania project center?

Peter Hersh:

The amount of interaction we have with the students typically changes in the course of seven weeks. When they are beginning their project, they work primarily with their sponsor, usually 9am–5pm, and we meet with them formally two or three times a week to get a sense of how the project has launched. As the project evolves, we see them more, almost daily, and oftentimes they'll send us an email or text to ask for a meeting to talk about some aspect of their research or other challenges. So the schedule becomes more fluid and on an as-needed basis. It's is very open-ended and helps build the trust that goes into these projects.

How do you interact with the students while at the Bar Harbor project center?

Once I arrive on site with the students in Bar Harbor, we have a lot of contact time. Usually it's in weekly meetings and also with the local project sponsor from Acadia National Park. I also go out in the field and work with them and I'm available to work with them at any time during that period as needed. There could be as much contact time as a student group needs but, ultimately, the students are driving the project. They develop their own ideas and I encourage them to solve their own problems.

A:

How do you measure success?

Success is when I see that our GQP work is adding value to our sponsoring companies, as well as the students' life and the lives of other people in a positive way. Success is when I see that our DS graduate students have contributed in a significant way to finish a challenging real-life team project, meeting all deadlines with high-quality deliverables. We are trying to make a difference in other people's lives with our GQPs and it has all been a great success.

172. How do you see the students change over the entirety of the Albania project experience?

A:

How do you see the students change over the entirety of the Albania project experience?

Robert Hersh:

Most fascinating is seeing how they change from the point they first understand their project—even in the term preceding their arrival at the project center—to when they leave for home. When they come to Albania, they often think they will be the experts teaching those that they come across. There is an aspect that with their expertise and technologies they are here to provide people with solutions to problems. That is dispelled quickly when they realize that the people they are working with have incredible knowledge on the project topic. They also realize that the idea of making a difference—a youthful passion we encourage—becomes complicated when they see what is happening in the country they're visiting.

What happens over the seven weeks is that they become practical visionaries. They understand that the projects themselves raise issues that are complex with respect to politics, culture, and the public or community acceptability of a particular solution. They begin to understand that making a difference is a very difficult process that requires from them the ability to understand social complexity and the need for a long-term commitment to something that their sponsors typically have.

When they arrive they are usually enthusiastic and naïve, and when they leave they have a much better sense about the demands that social reality creates for their project. They know what it means to persist over time to work with people on a collective problem for the benefit of the organization and a wider social good. It's an incredible learning experience for students that have never had the opportunity to work in a different culture.

173. How do you see the students change over the entirety of the Bar Harbor project experience?

A:

How do you see the students change over the entirety of the Bar Harbor project experience?

One of the biggest impacts on students when they come to Bar Harbor, or to any project center, is the level of achievement they experience. That translates to a level of confidence. It happens from working in a group. This is the essence of the whole WPI experience—students working in interdisciplinary teams. If team members include biology, electrical engineering, and music majors, the potential for growing and experiencing things beyond each individual person's experience is very high. The whole interaction within the interdisciplinary group moves students forward in terms of their confidence. I've heard so many students reflect on the experience by saying, "I accomplished things that I didn't think I could do."

174. How do you see the students change over the entirety of the Boston project experience?

A:

How do you see the students change over the entirety of the Boston project experience?

Seth Tuler:

They change both professionally and personally during the projects. Often they become much more confident in themselves, whether in engaging with their sponsor, their faculty advisor, and their teammates, or in their ability to maneuver in a new place. Many become more comfortable with ambiguity and uncertainty as it relates to their project topics, and they learn how to problem solve in unfamiliar situations.

Professionally, they begin to understand more of the relationships between technology choices in social, economic, and political contexts that broaden their thinking. They ask questions about what potential users or decision makers need to know and they start to realize there are many perspectives about appropriate courses of action.

182. How does WPI help the students prepare for their travel?

A:

How does WPI help the students prepare for their travel?

Prior to coming to Bar Harbor or any project center, WPI does a lot in terms of prepping the students relative to safety, how to maneuver through a culture, and what to do in case there's an emergency. During the term before traveling to the project center, the students are introduced to the culture of Bar Harbor—in particular, the history of Acadia National Park. There are lots of things we try to get across to the students because it's going to help them understand their project better and give them some more insight into what's going on in the park. One of the biggest transformations I observe is once a student is in Bar Harbor, the environment comes into play. Prior to being here, it's just a project. But as soon as they climb to a summit, get on a boat, go to a lake, become lost on a hike, they start to realize there's a lot to learn about the environment. This is when the project really starts to take shape.

How is my Math Placement determined?

The "Math Placement Exam" is a series of smaller modules and exams to help give guidance and recommendations for your first calculus course at WPI. We have divided the placement exams into different segments of material to help you decide if you are ready for a particular course. Since all of the Calculus sequence builds on material from the previous courses, you will work through placement exams for each course. Once you complete the exam, the math department will review your exams and send you your placement recommendation.

How is the Student Commencement Speaker chosen?

The Student Commencement Speaker is a graduate or undergraduate student who will deliver a 3–5-minute speech to all those in attendance at their Commencement Ceremony.

A call for the Student Commencement Speaker for each ceremony will be forthcoming in our March note to students, and auditions are generally held in April, with selection soon thereafter. Speaker candidates will audition in front of a group of peers and administrators. In-person auditions are highly recommended, although we will consider Zoom auditions for those candidates who cannot attend in-person.

Additional Information

: The Student Commencement Speaker is required to participate in pre-Commencement rehearsal and will be seated on the stage during their Commencement. It is recommended that speech auditions have a theme that is broadly relevant and meaningful to their class. Applicants must have excellent written and oral communication skills.

232. I completed a CARE referral, but the behavior is continuing, what do I do?

A:

I completed a CARE referral, but the behavior is continuing, what do I do?

If a concerning behavior persists, there are a few steps you could take. You can reach out to the CARE Team to provide an update. If you are able and comfortable, you can continue to express your observations and concerns to the person directly with empathy and without judgment. Additionally, you could offer them support by connecting them to on-campus resources, like the SDCC.

Remind yourself that behavior change takes time and depending on the situation, some change takes longer than others. If the behavior is impacting your relationship with the person, consider what your boundaries are, and how you are upholding them within the relationship.

A:

I have a great story to share or a newsletter I want to start, can Marketing Communications cover it/write it?

Sharing stories can take many forms, from an announcement or

social media

posts to a press release or a pitch to the media.

Check out

this page

about sharing news stories or send us a note at media@wpi.edu

and we can help determine how best to share your story.

For

newsletters

, think first about why you want one, what your goal is, who your audience is, how you'll distribute your newsletter, and what your budget is. Newsletters take considerable work to curate and manage content and require dedication by an owner or owners, and they might not accomplish your goal. If you determine you need a formatted newsletter, Marketing Communications can help set you up with an account in Mailchimp, a free (based on usage) email marketing platform. Contact

A:

I received notification that I'm eligible for a MA Grant (or VT or PA Grant) why isn't it in my award?

Answer: State grant programs including Massachusetts, Vermont, and Pennsylvania, notify students of eligibility in late spring but generally do not send rosters of eligible students to the school until close to the end of the summer. Our office will not award State Grant funds until we have received and certified the rosters sent to us by the particular State as there are sometimes changes that delay or eliminate funding before the student appears on a roster.

256. If I am already working with a private funder, should I still contact Foundation Relations?

A:

If I am already working with a private funder, should I still contact Foundation Relations?

Yes. Please let us know about any contacts you have with foundations, even if the relationship does not necessarily involve grant or gift funds. To be most effective for WPI, we do need to have a complete picture of the university's overall relationship and to occasionally help manage simultaneous requests to the same foundation. Consistency in our approach and management of WPI's many faceted relationships with foundations can impact our funding success. Recognizing that each circumstance is different, we will discuss ways in which we can, or even should, be involved. Sometimes, we will simply provide you with any insight we might have, including the funders historical relationship with WPI.

278. Is it fine if a project evolves or changes in scope over time?

A:

Is it fine if a project evolves or changes in scope over time?

If projects begin to deviate from the original concept, it's almost always a good sign because it shows some type of growth. A key reason is the dynamics created from the students' working with the park staff, many of whom have 40+ years of park experience and are extremely dedicated to the work they do. Students are often struck by their sponsor's commitment—and that changes the project. Sometimes a ranger will say something and a light bulb goes off in a student's thoughts and then there's a new idea and the ranger agrees with that idea and all of a sudden the project starts to evolve. That kind of flexibility is one of the primary characteristics of working in a group on a project in Acadia National Park.

A:

Is it ok if a project evolves or changes in scope over time?

Seth Tuler:

When projects change in scope, often in between the preparation phase and the term when they're doing their actual project work, it helps the students learn how to be flexible. That's part of the learning experience—how to emotionally deal with change from a planning and project management point of view. The projects usually evolve because the sponsor's understanding of the project can change over time.

Is it okay if a project evolves or changes in scope over time?

Peter Christopher:

When the new students arrive at the project center, what they envisioned as their project sometimes takes a little bit of a detour. But that's a good thing, because that's what happens in real life and one has to learn to make the adjustments so the project will work.

A:

I'm concerned about my student; who should I tell?
If you're concerned about the immediate welfare of your child or another student, call WPI Campus Police
at 508-831-5555. The Campus Police department is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year.

If you're concerned about your student's academic performance, current functioning, engagement on campus, or anything else related to their college experience, you may fill out the
"I'm Concerned about a Student" form

. This form will alert the WPI Care Team, a group of professional staff that meets weekly during the academic year to address the safety, welfare, and academic success of students. It includes representatives from across WPI and focuses on reaching out to students whose behavior has in some way come to the attention of others. The Care Team will then determine a plan of action (if deemed appropriate and needed) that is in the best interest of the student and the campus community.

304. I'm in a student organization and am trying to plan an event – how do I get access to book for my organization?

A:

I'm in a student organization and am trying to plan an event – how do I get access to book for my organization?

Access for student organizations is limited. The four core officers – president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer –qualify for access as long as they are correctly updated in TechSync before the beginning of each term. Student Activities supplies an updated report to the Events Office at that time.

In addition to those four officers, the president of each organization also has the opportunity to designate up to seven (7) additional people for each term. That form is emailed to the president listed on TechSync at the beginning of each term.

If you are among these qualified people, instructions will be sent at the beginning of the term for training videos and a quiz. You must correctly answer all questions on the quiz before access will be granted; you can take the quiz as many times as you need to in order to meet that requirement. Please allow up to three (3) business days after passing the quiz for your new access to take effect. There is no email notification that access has been granted – you can check the event form on 25Live; if you see more than two available options, your access has been processed.

If you qualify under more than one organization, you only need to complete this process once. It will be required each academic year if you remain in this position. The quiz and videos are updated each summer.

I'm new to campus or not familiar with many of the locations – how do I know what to request?

Locations in 25Live are tagged with helpful categories such as conference room, classroom, and event space. Looking at the details of each location provides further details such as capacity, features (e.g. projector, lecture capture, moveable seating), and a Google map to the building. You can check out the training videos on our resources page for instructions on how to find that information.

308. May I apply on my own if I already know the funder?

A:

May I apply on my own if I already know the funder?

No. Foundation Relations internal review process ensures that other faculty or staff members are not already seeking a grant from the same funder. Also, Foundation Relations works to maintain consistency and integrity of approach through on-going relationships with funders. It is possible that WPI has approached the funder before and/or will approach the funder in the future. These factors can have a significant impact on the success of not only your proposal, but also the proposals of your colleagues. Therefore, it is very important that all proposals to private and corporate funders are approved and submitted through Foundation Relations.

311. My parents are divorced / separated and they share custody, which is considered the Noncustodial Parent?

A:

My parents are divorced / separated and they share custody, which is considered the Noncustodial Parent?

Answer: General federal aid guidelines state that the parent with which the student lives the most is considered the custodial parent and that is the parent that should be filing the FAFSA. If the parents state that the student lives with each parent an exact equal amount of time in a year then the next measure is which parent provides more financial support for the student, therefore if time is equally split between both parents then the parent providing the most financial support would be the custodial parent and the parent that should be filling out the FAFSA.

WPI also requires the CSS Profile application for financial aid. We require a CSS Profile from both the Custodial and Noncustodial parent.

345. What are the benefits of the IQP experience for the students?

A:

What are the benefits of the IQP experience for the students?

Robert Hersh:

The experience forces students to mature because they have to take responsibility for their own learning.

They must be willing to live with discomfort when they find there's no one overarching perspective that will be the answer to their project. They learn how to work together not just to get a good grade but to take responsibility because the sponsor has a keen need for research on a particular aspect of a problem. They come to understand that it matters not just to that person but to other people. They have responsibility in the larger question, "how do we improve society and how do we improve peoples' lives?"

Students also benefit from the demands that projects impose on them. They must work together well as a team; they must understand and anticipate the needs of many different people. That they understand the social complexity of a problem is an enormous gift project-based learning gives them. They realize there are many different stakeholders in these issues.

347. What are the financial impacts of an NR?

A:

What are the financial impacts of an NR?

Only undergraduate students are able to take an NR. NRs allow for some flexibility in their academic choices without a potential negative impact. A student's tuition charges will not change if a NR is earned. If multiple NRs are earned throughout the academic years at WPI it could change a student's scheduled graduation date, which could result in additional time to complete degree requirements.

Students are eligible for a maximum of sixteen terms of institutional financial aid.

Therefore, this could increase a student's total cost of their degree.

Contact the Office of Financial Aid
to discuss your individual situation or
the Office of Academic Advising
for potential implications of the NR.

362. What do you find rewarding about the experience as a project advisor?

A:

What do you find rewarding about the experience as a project advisor?

I love all the work and the experience gained through GQPs. Students gain a unique experience working closely with stakeholders on their real problems. They learn how to tackle a real-world problem with messy and sparse data sets. They learn to give professional presentations, communication, and reporting—which are rewarding and essential for their successful future careers. My day is complete when I see students learn more and more every day and they gain more confidence because of it. These are some of the great things about advising GQP projects.

363. What do you personally get out of the experience of a project advisor?

A:

What do you personally get out of the experience of a project advisor?

The most meaningful thing to me as a project advisor is to see how students are transformed throughout the entire project period. Everybody deals with the experience differently but, overall, I often know during the course of the project that things are happening and that the students are growing and it's up to me to manage that growth. I take a lot of pride when I see that happening because it's a growth I don't often see in the classroom just because of the logistics of day-to-day classroom teaching. What I enjoy the most is when students come back to me two or three years down the road and shares the impact of their experience. Overall project advising is a much more rewarding experience for me than teaching in a classroom setting.

364. What do you see as the most beneficial aspect of WPI's project-based learning approach to education?

A:

What do you see as the most beneficial aspect of WPI's project-based learning approach to education?

It has many characteristics to it. The most positive is it acknowledges that diversified learning is how things should be functioning. The idea that one person has the solution to problems is outdated. You need to take a problem and view and tackle it from many different angles—not just from one area of expertise. Working in interdisciplinary teams allows for more innovation and more risk taking, which increases the opportunity for better results.

371. What exactly makes the off-campus IQP experience distinctive for the student?

A:

What exactly makes the off-campus IQP experience distinctive for the student?

In most cases, they spend a lot of time working on their projects. That can be evaluated—that can be quantified as there's a metric we look at. The thing that we can't quantify is the experience they're having off campus. Sometimes, that manifests itself easily, but oftentimes it doesn't; a deeper transformation goes on. That's what inspires students over the long run. That's what sticks with them. A few years down the road, many forget exactly what their project was, but they don't forget what changed them during that time. It's hard to put a number on that; it's hard to put a metric on that—but it definitely is there.

What happens after I refer a student to the CARE Team?

When a student is referred to the CARE team, the CARE Team Case Manager will read the referral information and determine the next steps of outreach. Depending on the situation, the most common first step is to reach out to the student directly via email to inquire about what support might be needed and how to access resources on campus. From there the student may be connected to supportive offices or staff appropriately or there may be additional outreach needed based on the severity of the concern.

412. What is the history of the project center and the sponsor relationship with Acadia National Park?

A:

What is the history of the project center and the sponsor relationship with Acadia National Park?

The first year we were here (2012) we had nine students—in 2017 we had 20— so there has been a strong, continuous growth in the program. I attribute that growth to word of mouth. The students like it here and they tell their fellow students about it. When we originally came to Bar Harbor, we didn't have any collaboration or association with Acadia National Park, so the initial projects were not sponsored by the park. Over that first year we reached out to contacts at the park and shared the story of WPI—what our project-based learning curriculum is all about, and it didn't take long until we convinced them to support this program. Our successful program is where it is now because of the collaboration of the national park and what its staff members bring to this project center.

416. What is the role of faculty advisor at a project center?

A:

What is the role of faculty advisor at a project center?

The advisor is responsible for many things. First is preparing the students prior to arriving at the center so they understand all the dimensions of the project and they have all the resources to tackle the problem.

When the students are actually on the ground at the center, the advisor oversees the plan they've put together, steers them in the right direction, and guides them in the execution of their plan.

417. What is the role of the faculty advisor at a project center?

A:

What is the role of the faculty advisor at a project center?

Seth Tuler:

My primary role as an advisor is to help the students figure out how to work with ambiguity, as often this is the first time they've been doing something, perhaps in their lives, where things aren't completely clear. A lot of the students are uncomfortable with that so I help them learn what to do when they're faced with uncomfortable situations.

I also feel that my role as an advisor is to help the students grow and mature in how they work with others and how they see themselves in a work environment—to help them understand that their role is not just to make a sponsor happy and to tell the sponsor what the sponsor wants to know, but to provide honest assessments and insights about what they have learned.

A:

What life skills do you impart upon the students along the way?

Strong starts and strong project closure combined by great team work, applying fresh data science perspective and technical skills toward the project while explaining their problem-solving skills to the sponsors is a key to the success of the project. We never give up when solving any problem, no matter how hard or complicated the project might be. I think it is a great success when the students learn that with applying their knowledge, willingness to learn new skills from the sponsor relevant to the organization, work as a team, and persisting, they can deliver the product by the end of the semester. We learn in our class that giving up is not an option, and this is the key perspective all students will leave GQP with.

431. What makes Army ROTC different from regular college management courses?

A:

What makes Army ROTC different from regular college management courses?

Army ROTC provides the best leader development program in the world. No corporation or leadership institute can provide the combined classroom and hands-on leadership training, education and practical application as Army ROTC. For instance, a ROTC Cadet may find themselves leading classmates through adventure training or through complex tactical problems that require a diverse set of problem-solving skills. This training is invaluable for any career that involves leading, managing and motivating people or fostering teamwork.

Additionally, while learning to become an Army officer, you are interacting, socializing and learning with Cadets with diverse backgrounds, experiences, political ideologies and goals. Leading through these dynamics on campus develops the team building, negotiating and consensus-building skills that Army officers need in helping the people of the world establish democratic systems, govern & secure themselves and institutionalize freedom and human rights.

A:

What makes the off-campus IQP experience distinctive for the student?

Seth Tuler:

The real power of students going off campus to do these projects is that they're working full-time on their projects. They have more responsibility for organizing their time and for defining what they do for the project. Since they are working typical business hours, they're able to give a lot more attention and reflection to what they're doing versus the academic experience on campus.

What preparatory work do the students do for their project prior to traveling to Bar Harbor?

Students go through a lot of preparation. They bring everything to bear to start solving the problem they'll be working on. They take a prep course and complete a pre-qualifying project (PQP) during the term prior to traveling to the site. The ID2050 course focuses on some of the techniques of doing research, how to write the paper, and how to think more globally and long term about the project. During the PQP preparation, the students better understand what their role is going to be and they work specifically with their team on their project in an effort to hit the ground running when they arrive.

437. What preparatory work do the students do for their project prior to traveling to Boston?

A:

What preparatory work do the students do for their project prior to traveling to Boston?

Seth Tuler:

First is a course about research methods, project management, and project design, in order for them to think about how other kinds of work, research, and experiences can be brought to bear on helping them understand what their project will be about.

Second is project work where the faculty advisor meets with each team separately over the course of the term to discuss the content of their project—applying the ideas, techniques, and tools they're learning in the course for their particular project. Much of the course is structured around helping them figure out what they don't know and what they need to know—and to start thinking about how to conceptualize in a more abstract way what the project is about.

A:

What preparatory work do you require the students to do for their project?

GQP is a capstone course and most Data Science students take it at the very last semester of their master's program. Thus, by the time they take the GQP course, they have already taken the course works necessary for their degree. This capstone experience helps them apply their skills learned through course work in a real-world situation.

444. What should I expect from private funding proposals/applications?

A:

What should I expect from private funding proposals/applications?

Every funder is unique and has its own guidelines and process. The information and narrative requested by funders can vary greatly and reflects their individual mission and focus. Many foundations require pre-proposals or letters of inquiry (LOI) as a pre-requisite to an invitation to submit a full proposal. These pre-proposals generally do not include full budgets, timelines, supporting letters or curricula vitae.

Each funder has its own set of allowable and unallowable budget items, so you need to be aware of what their requirements are when preparing the budget. Generally, these budgets do not carry the federally negotiated indirect rate, but you will find that many of the items counted as indirect costs in a government proposal are direct costs in a grant proposal. Examples of these items might include supplies, computers, facility use, and administrative support. It is important to know what costs are allowed in a budget – often “overhead” costs are impermissible. Similar to federal proposals, most foundation and corporation budgets require line-item justifications.

473. What was your role in the launch of the Albania Project Center?

A:

What was your role in the launch of the Albania Project Center?

Peter Christopher:

I became interested in setting up a project center in Albania based on some experiences I had many years ago. I spent nine months there in 1992 and 1993 seeing what Albania had done in terms of mathematics during the communist era. This is, of course, because I am a mathematician and I had a grant to study and write about it. So that was part of my motivation for setting up the center. In 2012, a representative of WPI's global program and I went over to investigate the possibilities of setting up a project center. We did so the next year and it was sort of an entrepreneurial enterprise getting the logistics worked out—housing, safety, special needs for particular students, etc. We were successful in 2013 and have built up from there.

476. What's the biggest challenge you see the students facing in Albania?

A:

What's the biggest challenge you see the students facing in Albania?

Robert Hersh:

In some cases, they're homesick. Sometimes they find being in a different environment or listening to a different language difficult. Some students from rural areas are surprised to find how busy a city like Tirana is and they find it is exhausting. On the very emotional level of student need, it can be challenging, but we, as advisors, are attuned to these challenges and we have opportunities to talk with them about how to handle these issues. Perhaps most fascinating challenges are those related to things they hadn't anticipated. There are no right answers to the problems—the data they think they can get oftentimes hasn't been collected or is not in the form they can use—and the projects change between when they came up with a project idea and when they are at the project center. They have to show incredible flexibility in the face of these changing projects.

Another challenge encountered at all project centers is figuring out the differences between what the sponsors might want and what we advisors want. Sometimes there's a research question we'd like them to approach in a rigorous way but the sponsor wants something more applied and practical—both are important to any project. The students become more sophisticated in how they satisfy the requirements set by their advisor in terms of what is an appropriate academic outcome and what might be useful for a sponsor. By the end of seven weeks they typically understand that, but it's still a big challenge.

477. What's the biggest challenge you see the students facing in Bar Harbor?

A:

What's the biggest challenge you see the students facing in Bar Harbor?

One of the biggest challenges relates to working in a team. Our culture teaches us that we are very individualistic, but when you work as a team, somebody else may have a different vision of the world. Others may have a different sensibility aesthetically—something about art—or somebody may know a little more about technology. The students who are really successful in this environment must have some humility as to how much they know so they can grow that knowledge.

What's the biggest challenge you see the students facing in Boston?

Seth Tuler:

When projects change in scope, often in between the preparation phase and the term when they're doing their actual project work, it helps the students learn how to be flexible. That's part of the learning experience—how to emotionally deal with change from a planning and project management point of view. The projects usually evolve because the sponsor's understanding of the project can change over time.

When did the Albania Project Center open and how many students have traveled to this center?

Peter Christopher:

We started the project center in 2013 with 12 students and three projects. We had 15 students in the second year, 23 in the third year, and 24 this year—and we expect to keep it at 24 in the future. This upcoming year, 39 students are interested in the 24 spots, so, you see, the project center location continues to grow in popularity. This particular location is very attractive to students. They haven't known much about it before arriving, but the word is getting out that there's a need for people in this country to have American students come over and give a different perspective on problems, and that our students are gaining a lot from their experience in Albania.

494. When do the students start to interact with their sponsor?

A:

When do the students start to interact with their sponsor?

Seth Tuler:

The students have opportunities to talk to or meet with their sponsors beginning in the preparatory phase of the project. The overall benefit is to give them time to understand both the problem and the context of the problem that the project grapples with and, perhaps, find some ways they can investigate it. Interacting with the sponsor early on provides them the chance to solicit input for development of their project proposal at the end of the preparatory phase.

A:

When picking up regalia, do I need my student ID?

If you pre-ordered your regalia by March 21, it will be at the WPI Bookstore on or after GRADFEST Day (April 25). To pick up your pre-ordered regalia, you will need your ID, so we can make sure you receive the correct sized regalia. If you miss the March 21 ordering deadline to order, regalia will be available for purchase at the WPI Bookstore on or after April 25th, with an additional $15 surcharge.

All students participating in Commencement Exercises must wear WPI regalia.

We recommend you take it out of the bag several days before commencement and hang it on a coat hanger to remove the wrinkles....you'll look better in non-creased regalia!

Anyone who has had close, personal, skin-to-skin contact with someone who has monkeypox is at risk. Why do I need to provide Workday account information?

Providing Workday accounting information (generally a cost center or any applicable activity codes) acts as an implicit agreement that any unexpected costs that occur as a direct result of your event (e.g.

broken furniture/equipment, additional custodial cleaning) will be charged to that account. For many larger events that include custodial details or furniture rentals, getting the account information ahead of time saves time once invoices are received and need to be processed.

Please note – this is not your student/employee ID number. If you don't have the financial account information, you can instead provide contact information for someone in your student org/department who would.

553. Why does WPI's leadership in global project-based learning matter to OpenSTEM?

Why does WPI's leadership in global project-based learning matter to OpenSTEM?

WPI is able to do this work because our global presence in all parts of the world has fostered a network of relationships with people who share our commitment to empowering people everywhere to become problem-solving team players.

Our approach is to understand the problems in the local context and share our expertise to help co-create solutions based on the local conditions with the communities they serve.

As part of a global community that wants to change the world through STEM, our approach and solutions are adapted to each nation's particular culture, needs, and educational infrastructure.

Peter Christopher:

Albania is an ideal project site because it is a developing country with a lot of needs. 555. Why is Bar Harbor a good project center location?

A:

Why is Bar Harbor a good project center location?

It's a good location for a number of reasons that might seem obvious. Some that aren't so obvious are what happens once the students get here. It's the accumulation of interactions with the people in that park—not just the tourists who enjoy the park and the people the park belongs to, but the people who manage the park—the Acadia Rangers and all the management staff we work with. One thing sustained throughout time is the dedication of these people at the park—I believe the students pick up on that immediately. They see they're not just doing something that becomes a project that sits somewhere on a shelf in a library; they'll come back years from now and they'll see that the work they did actually changed the park. And it's leading to further change down the road. That's a great takeaway from any project center.

557. Why is this a good project center location?

A:

Why is this a good project center location?

Seth Tuler:

Boston is a really great project center location because it's a dynamic city. It's changed a lot in the last 20 years and it's continuing to change. The sponsors we work with are always dealing with those changes and emerging problems, and so it gives the students a sense of how cities are growing and adapting. The Boston Project Center also offers the students the opportunity to gain experiences in federal, state, and local government, which is often new to the students, and helps them grow as they start to think about their careers and their professional life.

From a more logistical standpoint, Boston is also a great project center because it's not too far away from campus. That's great for international students who want to immerse themselves in a major U.S. city, and for other students who'd prefer to commute to a project center due to personal obligations or reasons.

558. Why should I choose Army ROTC over a different branch's ROTC?

A:

Why should I choose Army ROTC over a different branch's ROTC?

The Army offers a wider range of career opportunities, in more places around the world, than any other U.S. military branch. Recent Bay State Battalion Lieutenants are serving as Engineer Officers in Hawaii, Infantry Officers in North Carolina, helicopter pilots in Colorado, and Cyber Warfare Officers in Washington, DC. The Army is also the only ROTC program that allows graduates to commission into the National Guard or Reserve Component, for those Cadets who would like to pursue a full-time civilian career and serve as a part-time Army officer.

Why should I consider serving on the Staff Council?

Serving on the Staff Council has professional and personal benefits. Members will develop leadership, organization, and communication skills while collaborating with colleagues from various divisions, departments, and offices. As the council progresses, members will learn about the important issues affecting the university and its employees and help make recommendations for specific improvements. As they become advocates for WPI staff, they'll help drive change in areas important to the employee experience at WPI.

Will I be behind my fellow nonmilitary graduates after I complete my service obligation and decide to get out?

No. In fact, many companies prefer to hire former officers over new college graduates (even those with master's degrees). Your Air Force experience, the management skills you have gained on active duty and your active-duty educational benefits can give you the competitive edge you need.

567. Will my financial aid change if I take an NR?

A:

Will my financial aid change if I take an NR?

In following WPI's

Tuition and Financial Aid Policies

undergraduate students must earn 24 credits per academic year (A to D Terms) to remain in good academic standing and to have no impact to their financial aid.

If a student accumulates enough NR courses to impact their academic standing, or academic progress, that could result in an adjustment to the financial aid package. Review of academic progress is done after D Term each year, for the next academic year. Any adjustments made will be for the next academic year.

Contact the Office of Financial Aid
to discuss your individual situation or
the Office of Academic Advising
for potential implications of the NR.

*Please note that the WPI Institutional financial aid policy differs from the federal financial aid policy so review the policies carefully and reach out if you have questions.
